Is the tangle of cables under your workstation or in your HIFI installation a familiar sight? Not only does it look untidy, but it also interferes with your work and that of others. It creates dust traps, causes unnecessary computer, network and HIFI breakdowns, leads to short circuits and thus fire risks, and causes loss of data and working hours!

This 'cable spaghetti' seems unavoidable when you need to use so much electronic equipment. But this doesn't have to be the case! You can put the cables under your workstation or your HIFI rack in order by using BOSSCOM cable socks.

Besides improving your own workstation, this will also create a better working situation for others. ICT staff, for instance, will be able to do their job quicker and more efficiently, which will benefit the quality and performance of your equipment and network. Cleaners will be able to work better and faster, in accordance with the cleaning contract, which will reduce costs.

Fire risks will be avoided, as will loss of data and working hours. Reorganizations can be carried out quicker and more efficiently and the danger of tripping over cables will be a thing of the past.
